

Focusing on Mentor Visits

Weekly Report 25- 3/18 to 3/24

This week there was work going towards the final product and looking at the progress of the final product. The final product needs more work, which was evident when discussing how much work is left during the mentor visit. It feels as though so much has been completed, when in reality, a dent has barely been made. With research and scheduling and finding professionals, there is so much more to do. The product needs a lot of focus and work in order for more progress to be made. Even though there is more work to be done, there needs to be pride in what has already been completed.

Mentor visits have also been a source of stress lately. The mentor visits have not been working out too well, there have not been a lot. This is starting to look up with the fact that there are more that are scheduled. This means that for March and April, the needed hours of mentor visits will be reached as an hour per week. However, with missing harder classes, comes the requirement of being more focused and on top of one's work in class and outside of class. This will be a focus point regarding the next week.
